Market Review

The year took off on a euphoric note: vaccinations had begun, democrats had finally taken hold of the US senate and the new president-elect Biden announced a whopping 1.9trUSD plan to support the economy. Financial markets were propelled by the continued rebound in cyclical and value stocks. Unfortunately, the party did not last long as the emergence of new Covid-19 variants embroiled investors. Unsurprisingly, many governments were forced to strengthen their containment measures. Spooked by the perspective of new and prolonged lockdowns, markets gave up their gains in January.

The S&P 500 lost 1.1%, the Eurostoxx 600 gave back 0.8% while the Japanese Topix gained 0.2%. Emerging markets remained positive in January with the MSCI Emerging Markets gaining 3%.

In the fixed income markets, government yields rose (German 10Y yield +5 bps to -0.52%, US 10Y yield +15 bps to 1.07%) sustained by higher inflation expectations (EUR 5Y forward inflation expectation rate reached a 1-year high near 1.40%).

Portfolio Performance

During the month of January, the Fund has lost -0.05%. Equities were slightly negative as some strong performances, notably in the tech related sectors, offset most of the losses elsewhere. The fixed income bucket was also slightly negative during the month as interest rates rose. However, the impact on the portfolio was limited due to a not too aggressive duration profile of the bonds in the portfolio. Unlike bonds and equities, the US dollar had a positive contribution during the month as the greenback appreciated by 0.7% against the Euro.

During the month, we have kept high equity exposure, close to our 60% maximum limit and we have let duration slip to 5 given the strong momentum.

Market Outlook

Continued support from Central Banks is key to overcoming this period of flaring infections and slower than expected vaccination rates. Despite activity data being impacted in the short term, perspectives of broad vaccinations and various support plans all point to a brighter future. Looking forward, we continue to invest in a mix of structural growth themes (like US tech) combined with positions in laggard sectors and more cyclical plays like emerging markets (particularly China).
