Market Review

Investor sentiment took another hit in the first weeks of May as fears mounted that world growth would decelerate rapidly. Management of the coronavirus outbreaks in China, coupled with the consequences of the prolonged war in Ukraine (mainly on commodity prices), continued to push inflation higher, particularly production costs. Towards the end of the month, investors turned slightly more optimistic on the back of China's reopening prospects and rather resilient macro-economic data, particularly in the US. Finally, global equities finished roughly where they started with the S&P 500 remaining flat. European indices were however negative, as the Eurostoxx 600 shed 1.6% while Japanese stocks and emerging markets finished slightly positive (respectively +0.7% and +0.1%).

Central banks appeared more determined to fight inflation, even in Europe, which pushed interest rates higher. European government bonds lost another 2% during the month, bringing the year-to-date performance to -10.6% (iBoxx Eurozone Sovereign). Corporate credit also suffered, with the iBoxx Euro liquid Corporates losing 1% during the month.

The more aggressive ECB stance pushed the euro higher. The US dollar gave back some of its recent gains, losing 1.8% in May.

In the commodity space, energy prices continued to surge on the back of the EU's oil embargo. WTI crude oil increased by 9.5% to 115 $/b. Industrial commodities, however, posted further declines on the back of slower growth prospects and a further consumer shift from manufactured goods to services.

Portfolio Performance

During the month, the fund lost 1.12%. Performance was driven somewhat by all underlying asset classes (equities, bonds, currencies), as each contributed negatively in a similar manner. Equities were slightly negative; bonds lost some ground on rising interest rates (albeit much less than the overall market given the Fund's short duration profile); currencies contributed negatively mainly on the back of a slightly lower US dollar.

We haven't changed significantly our overall market positioning in May. We kept equity exposure at around 45% and the duration of the bond part of the portfolio at a low (3.2 as calculated on 50% of the portfolio).

Market Outlook

The world economy is at a crossroads. On the one hand, activity remains rather resilient in the face of China's woes regarding Covid, bottleneck issues, the war in Ukraine and surging inflation. Recent PMIs have indeed shown rather reassuring readings, particularly in the US. On the other hand, leading indicators are pointing to a path of uncertainty, as illustrated by declining consumer confidence and new export order data.

Within this framework, we continue to have a slightly more defensive positioning, having already lowered the equity exposure coupled with a more prudent sector allocation.
