Market Review

Equity markets rose in October, supported by a shift in investor expectations towards a less aggressive Fed and an earnings season that, despite being the weakest since the Covid outburst, gave a bit more visibility on current market conditions. The S&P500 rose by +8%, the Stoxx 600 by 6.3%, while emerging markets (-3.2%) continued to be affected by the strength of the dollar and the rise in interest rates. Chinese markets specifically fell sharply as Xi Jinping strengthened his grip with a third term as General Secretary, while overall rhetoric became even more radical, particularly towards Taiwan.
In the fixed income markets, credit benefited from higher risk appetite as credit spreads narrowed. Investment grade corporate bonds 0.4% while sovereign debt remained roughly unchanged 0.2%. 10-year German Bund yields remained slightly above 2.1% while peripheral bonds performed better (10-year Italian BTPs yield fell 20bps to 4.3%).
After a low point in September, oil prices rebounded by 8.9% following OPEC's announcement to cut production by 2 million barrels per day. The price of oil remains structurally high due to a combination of factors: insufficient investment since the mid-2010s, low inventories in Western countries, and the West's attitude towards Russian oil. Luckily, gas prices, on the other hand, continued to fall (-49% in October alone) on the back of high inventory levels, warmer weather and slowing economic activity.
Regarding corporate earnings, quarterly releases from S&P 500 companies showed earnings growth of only +2.2%, and a contraction of 5.1% excluding energy. Some of the big names in US tech indicated that the sector was not immune to the economic slowdown, while oil companies posted excellent results, benefiting from high oil prices.

Portfolio Performance

During the month, the Fund gained 2.78% on the back of the equity rebound. At the beginning of the month we had slightly increased out overall equity exposure from 37% to 41% as initial earnings publications reassured, particularly the banking sector.
On the fixed income part of the portfolio, as central banks increased interest rates, we have decided to slightly start increasing the duration profile. We have raised the duration to 3.5 (as calculated on 50% of the portfolio).
The foreign exchange exposure has been somewhat penalizing in October, mainly due to a small drop in the US dollar.

Market Outlook

Tightening monetary policies and the sharp rise in energy prices are affecting global growth. In the US, despite a preliminary GDP estimate for the third quarter at an annualized rate of +2.6% compared to -0.6% in the previous quarter, the rebound could be short-lived as overall economy weakens. Indeed, activity indicators continue to deteriorate in both industry and services, consumer confidence remains weak, and the construction sector is shrinking. Despite the slowdown in activity, the fight against inflation remains a priority forcing central bankers to keep monetary policy in tight territory for a while.
Therefore, we remain cautious on our equity exposure as the rebound periods are for the time being fueled mainly by expectations of a change in the pace of monetary tightening. In an environment of volatile interest rates, the resilience of cash flows is fundamental. We maintain our convictions on the energy and healthcare sectors, which have posted solid quarterly reports, and remain cautious on the consumer sector.
