Market Review

The month of October often revives bad memories for investors, and this one proved to be of a particularly rare vintage, only dwarfed by 1987, 1997 and 2008 ones. As worrying signs accumulated, financial markets experienced a heavy slump which sent most asset classes into negative territory for 2018. A deceleration in leading global macro indicators was noticeable; The Italian budget issues were amplified by the unwillingness of the government to make concessions; Brexit obstacles were a source of ongoing apprehension; And finally, the risk of a full-blown trade war between China and the United States increased significantly.

The S&P 500 had its worst month since 2011 losing 6.94%, while emerging markets extended their fall by another 8.78%. Japan was also under pressure (Nikkei -9.12%) amid sharp Yen appreciation (3.3% against the Euro). Finally, European stocks fared pretty well losing “only” 5.63% for the broad Stoxx 600 Index.

The flight to quality pushed interest rates lower with the 10-year German Bund falling 9 bps to 0.38%. At the same time peripheral spreads widened, particularly in Italy, where the 10-year BTP yields reached 3.43% which was 28bps higher compared to last month. Credit spreads also increased, reaching the 300bps mark on the Crossover index.

Portfolio Performance

During the month, the fund dropped 3.57%. Amid the equity sell-off, as described above, the fund’s Forex exposure proved to be a valuable source of protection. Indeed, exposure to GBP, JPY and CHF was increased beginning of the month. While progress on the Brexit front is being made, the British Pound had hardly budged and is trading still at excessively low relative levels to most major currencies. The JPY and CHF positions were increased merely for protection.

As we considered the fall in equity markets as a correction and not the beginning of a bear market, some arbitrages have been implemented towards the end of the month where outperformers were replaced by some excessively punished stocks.

For the Fixed Income part, credit profile has been left largely unchanged, while we have increased the duration to 5.6 from 4.7 last month.

Market Outlook

The question on everybody’s mind is very simple: Is this a correction or the beginning of a more prolonged downturn? Analysis of recent macro figures show a clear deceleration from recent highs. Real GDP growth rates for 2019 are below 2018 ones, yet still decent. PMIs are a touch lower than previous month ones, but remain well above 50.

Price actions in financial markets were dramatic in October reflecting concerns about both the China-US commercial dispute and the macroeconomic soft patch. Markets will require some time to digest both elements and more importantly to acknowledge that the macro picture is indeed blurrier. In coming months however, the global economy should remain decent and above trend. Such a mindset should see investors jumping back into equities leading to a rebound from current low levels. What markets lack at the moment is a catalyst, a China-US deal is a potential, if not the best, one.
