Market Review

Reason didn't prevail and the unexpected scenario of a full-scale invasion of Ukraine took place in February. After recognizing the independence of the two separatist regions, V. Putin launched a major offensive on the country with a probable objective to replace the Ukrainian political power. The western world has gradually implemented harsh economic sanctions going from targeting Russian oligarchs to excluding certain banks from the SWIFT protocol. Commodity prices exploded putting further pressure on short term inflation expectations. On the macro economic front, recent data has been supportive, but the current situation has made any future predictions harder, unfortunately, the only likely impact being negative for the world growth.

Equity markets plummeted during the month with the S&P 500 losing 3.1% and the STOXX Europe 600 shedding 3.4%. Japanese stocks were somewhat more resilient, losing 0.5%. In the fixed income markets, all segments suffered by more than 2%. Higher interest rates and wider credit spreads pushed bond prices lower as investors assessed direct and indirect exposure of their holdings to Russia.

Portfolio Performance

During the month, the Fund lost 1.58%. The drop in equities explains most of the performance even though the fixed income part of the portfolio also suffered. Gold contributed positively and proved to be a true safe asset in this time of uncertainty. Exposure to currencies (mainly the US dollar) had a flat contribution during the month as the strong performance in the last few weeks only offset initially stronger euro.

Amid the escalation of the situation in Ukraine, we have reduced somewhat our equity exposure from 54% to 49%. We have mainly reduced our European exposure which is ultimately more impacted by the current crisis. Nevertheless, we kept a relatively high exposure to equities given strong earnings momentum while remaining very vigilant on stock selection.

Market Outlook

Full scale invasion of Ukraine was not our base case scenario. However, given our stock selection on the one hand and performance stabilizers (the US dollar, the Japanese Yen, Gold,...) on the other hand, we have managed to cushion the impact of the recent market sell-off. Given high level of uncertainty, we consider the current approach appropriate. Exposure to quality stocks should eventually continue to produce solid results on the back of strong fundamentals while the rest of the portfolio should continue to act as protection against the current backdrop. Typically, the fixed income part of the portfolio remains highly liquid and should benefit as central banks assess the Ukrainian conflict and the future pace of interest rate increases.
